

BETWEEN STALLS

THE WINDHOEK
MARKETS

APRIL 2026

BIO-MARKET/ GREEN
MARKET

Quiet Exchange

Before a face is remembered,
there is the hand.

Open, waiting,
reaching across a table
for something small enough to hold
and large enough to matter.

A coin warms in a palm.
A paper bag folds around fruit.
Fingers brush for a second
and then separate,
each carrying their own part
of the morning.

Here, exchange is quiet.
Not dramatic,
not loud,
just the ordinary miracle
of one thing leaving
and another arriving.

The market moves
from hand to hand,
through touch,
through habit,
through the soft agreement
that this is how a day continues.

THE WINDHOEK VILLAGE MARKET

Where connection links

At this market,
voices arrive before the body does.

People lean closer here,
not only to look
but to listen,
to answer,
to become part
of the rhythm of being among others.

A question is asked.
A story is slipped in beside a price.
Someone laughs,
someone lingers,
someone leaves
carrying more than they came for.

Because some things are bought,
and some things are simply exchanged
in the warmth of attention,
in the ease of being noticed,
in the brief comfort
of a shared moment
between strangers
who no longer feel like strangers.

THE WINDHOEK OSHETU MARKET

Movement to profit

Morning does not wait here.
It begins already moving.

A kind of quiet endurance
lives in these motions,
in the focus of those
who know that survival
is often made
from repetition.

Here, work is not hidden.
It stands in the open,
under sun,
under dust,
under the weight of the day,
and still continues.

By the time the market is full,
someone has already earned
the right to be tired.

ABOUT AUTHOR

I am a Namibian based creative working at the intersection of photography and visual storytelling.

My work explores everyday spaces and human experiences, with a focus on emotion, identity, and connection. Through a combination of documentary imagery and poetic writing,

I aim to capture moments that are often overlooked but deeply felt. Windhoek Markets reflects my interest in the subtle exchanges that shape daily life, presenting markets not only as places of trade, but as spaces of community, labour, and shared experience.
